It comes in the form of gender, economic status, class, and race, among other things. We hear the phrases, "privilege" and "white privilege" a lot. Sometimes, we're not even sure what the term means. So, I decided to write about it, and share what I know. Hopefully, this will help you to understand the concept a little better. I will first outline how privilege operates in the world of daily life and then move to how it affects how we think and how we behave. Finally, I will explain how we can begin to see privilege in our own lives, without feeling like the only person in the world who is privileged. Gender privilege: The first privilege I want to discuss is gender. I had an encounter with gender privilege a few years ago. I was on a men's health walk, where I exercise and meet new men who have "struggles". I had come up to the first male friend I had made at the event, and started to ask him a few questions. He was from a very different part of the world than I was. He had a different style of clothing and hair, a different walk and talk, and different values. I had just started dating my first serious boyfriend, so we were both getting to know one another. This man started to explain to me how he and other men, like him, had to adjust the way they dressed and the way they acted, just to be accepted as they were. My question was, "But why can't you be who you are, and be accepted as such?" I had not seen this kind of conformity in my own life and I did not know what to think. He replied, "It's not that simple. Because I am a man, I have to present a certain image of myself." It was a moment of clarity for me, when I had a vision of what he meant when he spoke of his "image". It made me think about the messages we learn from society, and how these messages affect the way we behave. He was not presenting a "false image", nor was he being "not true to himself". He was presenting an image that reflected society's vision of what men are supposed to be. I thought
